

worker. I am happy to say that the Alliance has been a great success, with 170,000 participants, nearly 1 million course enrollments and over 12.5 million hours of training.

Morty Bahr is a pioneer of the Information Age. His effort to furnish workers with the tools they need to improve their lives not only created the telecommunications technicians who are integral to our economy, but it also made America the leader in all manner of communications. This effort is of particular importance today, as America faces the daunting task of maintaining its role as a global leader in the research and development of new science and technology.

The Alliance is only one of the many revolutionary partnerships and programs Morty has guided and nurtured throughout his career. Others include the National Coalition for Telecommunications Education and Learning (NACTEL), one of the first partnerships of major telecom companies working together with their unions to advance education. NACTEL is an online learning partnership with CWA, IBEW, Verizon, SBC, Qwest and Citizens/Frontier.

Morty and his wife Florence recently celebrated their 60th wedding anniversary and have two children, five grandchildren and two great-grandchildren. As Morty begins his retirement, I hope you will join me in wishing Florence and him a healthy and relaxing journey. His heartfelt dedication to the workers of this nation will not be forgotten.

IN SUPPORT OF THE CAMPAGNA CENTER

HON. JAMES P. MORAN

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 22, 2005

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of the Campagna Center, the leading nonprofit human services organization in the city of Alexandria, Virginia. For 60 years, the Campagna Center has served low-income citizens in my district, providing both Early Head Start and Head Start programs to over 300 income-eligible families. The center also provides child care, tutoring, and mentoring programs to school-aged children, and meaningful volunteer opportunities to older members of my district.

The work of organizations like the Campagna Center is crucial to the development of children who come from lower-income households, offering the opportunity to truly level the playing field for these children and prepare them for school. The programs offered at the Campagna Center include early childhood education, as well as health and nutritional services. The Campagna Center, however, recognizes that family is the most important influence in a child's life, and parents and other family members are strongly encouraged to be active contributors to these programs.

Recognition of this wonderful organization is especially poignant as this body debates HR 2123, School Readiness Act of 2005. It has been said that Education is the great equalizer in a democratic society, and we must ensure that programs like these continue to receive the funding required to help children achieve. The impact of Head Start programs is not measured in dollars, but in the faces of children who finally have the opportunity to excel in their education.

The Campagna Center has provided such opportunities to students in my home district, and the impact on these children is significant. I congratulate the Board of Directors, staff members, and all of the selfless volunteers that make this organization such a success. Under their leadership, hundreds of young children go to school prepared for the challenges that lie before them.

INTRODUCTION OF THE PETS EVACUATION AND TRANSPORTATION STANDARDS (PETS) ACT OF 2005

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 22, 2005

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I am joined today by my colleagues, CHRISTOPHER SHAYS of Connecticut, Mr. DON YOUNG of Alaska, Mr. JAMES OBERSTAR of Minnesota, and Mr. BARNEY FRANK of Massachusetts to urge our colleagues to join with me in introducing H.R. 3858, the Pets Evacuation and Transportation Standards (PETS) Act of 2005. This common sense legislation would simply require state and local preparedness groups to include plans for evacuating pet and service animals in the event of a major disaster.

The destructive force of Hurricane Katrina exposed many flaws in our nation's emergency preparedness programs, and any disaster plan's top priority must be to save citizens from the affected areas. One easily correctible issue that has come to light, however, is the fact that many of our cities' plans do not incorporate a protocol for rescuing pet owners. Without a corrected protocol, pet owners are unnecessarily forced to choose between their own safety and the safety of their pets.

Mr. Speaker, as you may know, in order for a state to qualify for FEMA funding, state and local emergency preparedness authorities are required to submit a plan on how they will deal with a disaster. This legislation does not transfer any funds from planners or rescuers, but rather requires states to include how they plan to accommodate their incumbent pet population as well as people with disabilities that are aided by service animals. FEMA will require the jurisdictions to submit their emergency preparedness plans in order to be eligible for FEMA funding assistance in the event of a disaster.

In hurricane-ravaged New Orleans, the lack of planning added to the burden and stress of both rescuers and residents. In a city of 500,000 as many as 69 percent of the people are pet owners and, by some estimates, there are as many as 600,000 pets and animals affected by the devastation of hurricane Katrina. Private rescue organizations estimate they have saved about 5,000 animals so far and have reunited only 600 animals with their owners. Estimates indicate there are an equal percentage of pet owners nationwide. Given these statistics, we hope you agree an emergency plan that incorporates pets is warranted.

Mr. Speaker, the faces of the men and women stranded in flooded New Orleans will be forever etched in my mind. The images of little children with nothing in the world other than the shirts on their backs still disturb me at night. But I cannot help but wonder how many more people could have been spared the wrath of Hurricane Katrina if only they could have taken the family pet.
